Your ASSIST Score?

The Alcohol, Smoking and Substance Abuse Scoring (ASSIST) Test was developed by the World Health Organization (WHO) to evaluate a person’s use of cannabis. The ASSIST score shows whether a person’s cannabis use should be considered a problem. Higher scores usually mean serious problems. The chart is in the shape of a pyramid to show that there are more people with low ASSIST scores than high ones.

Your ASSIST score is 19. The white area of the chart shows where your score falls.

You noted that you usually drive after using cannabis, or ride with a driver who has. Research has shown that driving high causes you to weave in and out of lanes, slow down and then speed up, miss signs, misjudge time and distance, exhibit slow reaction time, and it can double your risk for a serious crash. Treat cannabis like alcohol and do not drive, or arrange a ride from a sober driver.

You noted that you usually drink alcohol or use other substances when using cannabis. Here are some common risks:

Greening Out: Drinking alcohol or using other substances before consuming cannabis can increase the likelihood of greening out - feeling nauseous, dizzy, needing to lie down, and vomiting.

Intensified Effects: Highs experienced from cannabis, alcohol, or other substances can be felt sooner and more intensely when used together. When drinking before using cannabis, higher levels of THC are absorbed. This often results in an increased heart rate, memory impairment, poor judgement, or problems negotiating consensual or safer sex.

Overuse: Combined use of substances increases all kinds of risks, including passing out or making bad decisions. Vomiting is how your body gets rid of excess alcohol or reacts when using more than one substance. Cannabis makes it difficult to vomit which increases your risk of choking and/or alcohol poisoning.

You mentioned that you get your cannabis from a dispensary or licensed service. That's the safest bet. If you get your cannabis from another source, you can never be sure what you're buying.
